PERFORMING ARTS WORKSHOP

Have you ever had the urge to perform? To get up before friends and family—and even strangers—in a dance or in an original script you've helped create? The Performing Arts Workshop has been in the business of cultivating people's talents in dance and drama since 1965. Executive Director Gloria Unti launched PAW with a theatre program for minority youth at the Buchanan YMCA sixteen years ago. She's been teaching and directing ever since. Each year PAW brings weekly classes in creative movements and dramatics to 600 children in the San Francisco public schools. The school teachers experience the process, too, in special training workshops Gloria conducts. Her success has been recognized by the California Dance Educators' Assn., which recently named her an outstanding educator.

If you have a job where you sit most of the day or function under a fair amount of stress, you may find that PAW's "Workplace Wellbeing Project" offers the right antidote to a familiar syndrome. 200 workers at San Francisco General Hospital have toned up, down, and generally enjoyed their "dance bread" at lunch time. They also give periodic demonstrations for their fellow employees and friends. A choreography class has been added at the request of the "students," and musicians among the hospital staff are beginning to participate in the performances.

Studio classes in creative movement and modern dance for children and adults continue, with a special program in theatre production for teens each June and July. The "Summercity Players" recently performed their show, Danger: Teens at Work, at the People's Theatre Coalition here at Fort Mason. Some students do go on to serious artistic careers, but many cherish the community experience which has prepared them for success in a multitude of occupations.

BRING THE COUNTRY TO THE CITY

Urban residents will have the opportunity to nibble at the world's largest tossed green salad, buy fresh produce at actual prices paid to growers and talk with live farmers during the Farmers' Fair, Saturday and Sunday, August 8 and 9, 10am-5pm at Pier 2.

City dwellers will be able to view newborn chicks, lambs and goats—big ones and pygmies. They will learn about bees from a honey bee queen, the feasibility of gasohol production from experts and taste freshly churned butter on homemade bread in an old-fashioned kitchen setting. A costumed lady will card and spin wool, others will be quilting on old-fashioned machines. Designers will personalize flower arrangements to be sold at "fair" prices. The colorful Foggy Mountain Cloggers, four groups of square dancers, the bluegrass fiddlers and several mouth harpists will perform continuously during the two-day festival.

The event is sponsored by California Women for Agriculture, a volunteer statewide organization, to illustrate the interrelationship and interdependence of farmers and consumers.

The strong ties which bind rural and urban people can be explored in face to face discussions with growers who will graphically illustrate their role in the food chain.

Tickets will be available at the door on Saturday and Sunday August 8th and 9th. Advance tickets are available through Ticketron, $5.00 for the family, $2.50 Adults, $1.00 Seniors and Children 12-18. Children under 12 are FREE. Call 495-4088 for Ticketron locations and information.

POETS AS PROPHETS COME ALIVE!

At this writing the Poets as Prophets Series has completed twenty-three live programs. Sponsored by the Poetry Film Workshop, the series has involved 14 actors from theaters throughout the Bay Area in dramatic readings. These dramatic interpretations have included tapes, (original voice) as well as poetry films. Some of the better known performers/narrators include Martin Ponch, Susan Block, Irwin Tosen, Olwen Morgan, Wallace Gorrell, Berona Seiter and Bernadette Vaughn.

The final program on Sunday, August 2, 7:30pm to 10pm will highlight the works of twelve prime movers in Modern American Poetry from Lorca through Anne Sexton and will be recorded for KPFA. This and past theatrical presentations have reviewed significant works by modern American as well as World Poets from 1920 to 1970. It is the first attempt to establish an ongoing Poetry Film Theatre similar to the film repertory movie houses which have successfully kept alive the great films of cinematic history.

There has been a variety and profundity of poetry produced in this country and throughout the world during fifty years of war, revolution, and social transformation. It commands a generous and articulate airing as a repository of wisdom and beauty to our own time. The Breath of experience previewed in these programs has extended from Gertrude Stein to Susan Griffin, from T.S. Eliot to Etheridge Knight and in English translation Mayakovsky, Lorca, and Brecht as well as Japanese and Israeli feminists Kazula Shiraishi and Raquel Chalfi. Other stars who are and have been in the "Revival" are Rilke, Dylan Thomas, Langston Hughes, Pablo Neruda, Octavio Paz, Kenneth Patchen, Frank O'Hara, Anne Sexton, Denise Levertov and many others.

For more information on programs past and future contact the Poetry Film Workshop building D by calling 921-4470.
